Many doing what they can in disaster

taste amazing, the wreckfish off the Charleston Bump are sweet, and the way of life that surrounds humans' attraction to, and nourishment from, the sea is something we celebrate.

I know a lot of people who are frustrated by the wringing of our collective hands and the indecision surrounding how to tackle something this big. But there are many, many people who are acting, mobilizing and talking about what to do. I met a lot of them last week.

Like the woman who maintains the fish tanks at a wildlife center. She had been sick for days, but she dragged herself in to talk to a group of people about the great diversity of the bay so that her boss could stay on the phone with people who needed his expertise about the area.

Like the volunteering boat captains who know the winding waterways better than anyone and who don't like being onshore on most days but especially when they know they might help.

And like the artist who spends most of the time in her basement studio surrounded by palms that brush the louver windows, but where, on a Friday afternoon, she was using her organizational skills to mobilize contacts for a meeting of neighbors.

Of course, in the air was the thought that there was not enough being done, or that what was being done was not being done fast enough. But these people were not pointing fingers.

They were doing what they can. And we need to support them however we can.

They are our brothers and sisters.

They are us.

QUICK TIPS

Relationships

Q: When you get to the point where you feel like the spark is gone, what can you do as a couple — both the husband and the wife — to help get it back?

A: This is the most common question that couples have over time. The passion and excitement in a relationship need newness, mystery and arousal. I would encourage you to do activities that are new together (new class, new restaurant, new anything together), mystery (surprise each other with notes, etc.) or arousal (exercise together — the arousal that is produced by the exercise can get transferred to your relationship).

Beauty + style

Tradition dictates that one is only allowed to wear white between Memorial Day and Labor Day.

But who really follows that rule? Whether you wait to wear white after Memorial Day or you break it out early, there are still good rules to dress by.

I was sent these sensible rules from MySkins, which makes nude, seamless undies: Do not wear white lingerie under white clothing — this is the most common mistake made by women. A white bra or panty will show right through white or light colored clothing. Choose a nude bra and panty that
